

BERLIN READS SECRET NOTES

BERLIN, Jan. 2.—(By the Associated Press.)—Under the title "The Poincare Affair," Theodor Wolff publishes in the Berliner Tageblatt what are said to be the confidential reports to his government of the late A. P. Iswolsky, Russian ambassador to France from 1912 to 1917. These reports, written in 1912-13 and recently secured from the archives of the former Russian government, purport to show that M. Poincare "foresees the war and did nothing to prevent it, but actually sought to further it to France's interests."

After M. Poincare's election as president, the Iswolsky reports say, he carried on conversations and developed France's policy with regard to Russia over the heads of his responsible ministers.

MONEY MENTIONED
During this period, M. Iswolsky mentions money sent by Russians for "subsidizing" the French press and diplomatic and political circles and reports this was distributed "under the supervision of a French minister," and that it already had the desired effect.

M. Iswolsky reported on January 29, 1913, as to the French attitude toward the Russian and Austrian troubles in the Balkans. M. Poincare, Iswolsky said, had emphasized that he was able to exert a controlling influence on the country's foreign policy and had declared he would work for the closest harmony between Russia and France.

He indicated it appeared most important to the French government to prepare French opinion for French participation in a war which might arise out of the Balkan situation. M. Poincare was also reported as urging that Russia should not enter any undertaking on this matter without previous commitments with France.

GERMANS MAKE OFFER
After previous conversations with M. Poincare and Foreign Minister Charles Jonnart on January 12, 1913, the Russian ambassador had reported to Foreign Minister Sazonov that the French government appreciated the necessity of participation in the world war which the situation was likely to precipitate. She desired, however, pre-war commitments with Russia, as otherwise French public opinion would not admit the necessity of such participation.

In conclusion M. Iswolsky reported efforts by the German cabinet to enter into special negotiations with France over the Balkan situation. M. Poincare was quoted as saying, "I recognized the inclination of Jules Cambon, French ambassador to Germany, to concede the German request, but that he had impressed on M. Jonnart the advisability of making an end to the attempts of the German foreign minister, Gottlieb Von Jagow, to bring about an amicable understanding."

CONTRADICTION SHOWN
In commenting on the reports, Herr Wolff writes:

"When Poincare reached the highest office in the gift of France he saw from this elevation coming war as an obvious occurrence. He does not suppress such sentiment and conviction, however; he is cold blooded and rarely asks and demands of Russia not a policy or peace but that he be promptly 'tipped off' to what is going on. In this he is not actuated by the desire to avert the catastrophe but by fear that he otherwise will not be able to prepare the French people for war."

Herr Wolff says M. Iswolsky's reports contradict M. Poincare's assertion that he had no part in effecting the removal of the French ambassador to Petrograd, George Louis, who was recalled because of his alleged passivity and replaced by M. Theophile Delcasse.

"There is today," concludes Herr Wolff, "an affair Poincare. He must rest assured that hidden archives will bring to light further revelations."

SOME OF THE "SUN-KIST" BEAUTIES WHO CAPTURED NEW YORK

Here With "Sun-Kist," Fanchon and Marco's Latest Musical Success, at the Orpheum for One Performance Only Tonight

The foibles of the motion picture industry form the basis of the plot of "Sun-Kist," Fanchon and Marco's hilarious musical revue which plays tonight at the Orpheum.

Handling the jovious humor of the offering are some of America's popular comedians, Don Barclay, late of Ziegfeld's Follies, and Doll Chain, a most clever light comedian; Hyman Meyer, Si Layman and Helen Kling, the dance wizards; while Miss Charlotte Woodruff, the prima donna, has a most beautiful soprano voice. Other members of the cast, especially noteworthy are Cornish Beck, Lucita Cor-vera, Daisy De Witt, Helen Kennedy, Evelyn Gerald, Rowena Ray and Lorena Hall. The girls, a cluster of California's best in youth and beauty are a big feature.

Chicago's noted costumer, Lester, dressed the production, and the catchy music and lyrics are from the pens of Fanchon and Marco.

BERLIN FEARS USE OF BLACK TROOPS

BERLIN, Jan. 2.—(By the Associated Press.)—"France wants submarines and a big fleet to protect her sea bases and enable the transportation of African black troops to Europe in the event of another war," was the opinion expressed today by Admiral Von Grapow in discussing the Washington conference and "French misrepresentation."

The admiral expressed the belief that if the French arguments for submarines were answered with a provision forbidding the use of colored troops on European battlefields, France's demands would prove "so palpably absurd as to fall to pieces, leaving her dependent on defensive sea weapons." Unless France is pacified he saw the complete failure of the Washington conference, for he believed Italy and Japan would insist on their contentions as long as France held out.

Admiral Von Grapow charged that M. Briand, the French premier, was deliberately misrepresenting the situation, unless he "essayed a foolish joke," in his conference with the press representatives in London in December, 1919, when he is alleged to have argued that France was "without hostile intentions toward Great Britain," but had to have more sea-fighting facilities in order to keep Germany in check.
